Download directionsAs countries across the globe continue to deal with a novel coronavirus, the World Health Organization is urging international leaders to work with their health agencies to improve their capacity to deal with a range of infections in the future. The 2019 novel coronavirus pandemic has already claimed the lives of more than 14,000 people globally and has laid bare the inadequacies of the global health system. According to the WHO, most of the infections and deaths have occurred in the People's Republic of China. "We are deeply saddened by the suffering of millions of people because of the novel coronavirus disease," WHO Director-General Dr. Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus said in a statement on Tuesday. "The coronavirus is a global threat, and the international community has a duty to act." [Read more: Bill Gates weighs in on what to do with the millions of coronavirus tests now in short supply] Citing the outbreak of other infectious diseases, including Ebola, HIV, Zika and tuberculosis, Dr. Ghebreyesus said there is a need to improve global response capacity to infectious diseases. "We are calling on all governments to urgently reinforce their capacities to respond to outbreaks, and to establish early warning systems," he said. "In particular, we need to build up the capacities of countries that are most vulnerable to infectious disease threats, such as malaria, TB and HIV." "Our health systems have not been built to deal with a serious infectious disease outbreak, and we need to strengthen and make these systems more resilient," he added. Since the outbreak of COVID-19, the WHO has made a series of announcements to keep its member states informed of the evolving situation. On March 11, Dr. Ghebreyesus declared the outbreak of the novel coronavirus, or COVID-19, to be a "public health emergency of international concern." [Read more: Amid reports of Ebola spreading in Congo, WHO gives lowest possible risk assessment: 'Extremely low'] The WHO declared the coronavirus a global health emergency on January 30, the same day it was first identified. Also on Tuesday, the organization's technical panel on COVID-19 released new recommendations for global health agencies to establish a coordinated
